Life on the River

May of 2009 witnessed commercial fishermen dropping their seines into the Minnesota River near New Ulm for the first time in nearly half a century and Minnesota River Valley National Scenic Byway photographer Ron Bolduan was there. The results were both unexpected and pleasantly surprising.

The Regional River History and Information Center of New Ulm invites you to view these images and other favorite memories and moments from Ron's years of wandering the river valley. This free to the public presentation focuses on the natural beauty, wildlife, recreation and other human activity taking place upon the river.

Where: New Ulm Public Library Basement

When: 7 PM Thursday November 19, 2009

The Regional River History Center of New Ulm and the Minnesota River Watershed Alliance are sponsoring this presentation and others to draw interest to the natural, cultural and historical aspects of the Minnesota River Watershed.

The Regional River History Center of New Ulm provides citizen access to the Minnesota River and Cottonwood River watershed basins including online data, along with area historical and cultural artifacts. This history center is located on the Minnesota River at Riverside Park school house in New Ulm.

The Minnesota River Watershed Alliance (Watershed Alliance) is an organized network of citizens, public agencies and private organizations dedicated to communicating the benefits of an ecology healthy Minnesota River Watershed to others and are actively working toward its improvement and protection. The MinnRivWA meets four times a year and encourages landowners and recreational users of the river to be part of this effort.
